HISTORICAL SKETCH.

BY A. L HULL.

1784–1797.

The University of Georgia had its legal conception in an act of the Legislature, approved February 25, 1784, the intention of which primarily was to lay out amid the virgin forests of the State two counties, Washington and Franklin; the one extending from the line of Richmond and Wilkes to the Oconee river, and the other from Wilkes to the Cherokee Nation, between the Oconee and the Keowee Rivers.

A section of that act provides: "And whereas the encouragement of religion and learning is an object of great importance to any community, and must tend to the prosperity, happiness and advantage of the same, Be it therefore enacted, etc., that the County Surveyors immediately after the passing of this act shall proceed to lay out in each county twenty thousand acres of land of the first quality in separate tracts of five thousand acres each for the endowment of a College or seminary of learning, and which said lands shall be vested in and granted in trust to his honor the Governor, for the time being, and John Houston, James Habersham, William Few, Joseph Clay, Abraham Baldwin, William Houston, Nathan Brownson, and their successors in office, who are hereby nominated and appointed Trustees for the said College or seminary of learning and empowered to do all such things as to them shall appear requisite and necessary to forward the establishment and progress of the same; and all vacancies shall be filled up by the said Trustees. And the said County Surveyors shall in six months after the passing of this Act make return to the Trustees hereinbefore mentioned of regular plats of all such tracts as shall be laid out and surveyed by virtue of this Act."

In pursuance whereof the eight tracts were laid out which are now included in the counties of Hancock, Oglethorpe, Greene, Clarke, Jackson and Franklin and still another across the Savannah river in the State of South Carolina, which will be treated of hereafter. These tracts were known as the Fishing and the Falling Creek tracts in Oglethorpe, the Richland Creek tract in Greene, the Sandy Creek tract in Clarke, the Shoal Creek tract in Franklin, the Shoulder-bone tract in Hancock and the Keowee tract in South Carolina.

The following year, 1785, a bill was introduced to complete the establishment of a "public seat of learning," which was approved January 27, 1785, and constitutes the Charter of the University of Georgia.

On February 3, 1786, an act was passed requiring the trustees to meet and proceed to the transaction of the business for which they had been appointed.

In pursuance of this act, the first meeting of the trustees was held in Augusta, Georgia, February 13, 1786. There were present Abram Baldwin, William Few, William Glascock, John Habersham, Nathan Brownson, Hugh Lawson and Benjamin Taliaferro.

Abram Baldwin was chosen president of the University and as such continued until the institution went into active operation in 1801.

The work of the trustees for the next fourteen years consisted of the management of their lands with a view to accumulating a fund which could be used in erecting buildings and paying teachers. The scheme contemplated a long rent-roll, according to the English ideas that prevailed at the time, which it was hoped would sustain the institution. But experience proved that rents of lands in this new country could not be depended on for a certain income.

On one of the tracts in Greene county in July, 1798, the town of Greenesborough was laid off by the trustees, and one thousand acres of land were offered for sale or lease in the immediate neighborhood of the new town.

It was the desire of some of the trustees to erect a building in Greenesborough and locate the college there; but there seemed to have been great difficulty in getting a quorum of the board together to act upon the suggestion. A meeting was appointed at the "Coffee House" in Louisville, then the capital of the State, in January, 1799. After three successive adjournments a quorum was had and then only seven were present. After the meeting of the board, the Senatus Academicus was formed and proceeded to business. This august body was composed of the Governor, the Senate, the Judges of the Superior Courts, the President and Trustees of the University. They sat in solemn state and confirmed or rejected the acts of the trustees.

On November, 28, 1800, the Senatus Academicus organized the college by the election of a President at a fixed salary of $1,200 per annum and prescribed a curriculum of studies for six classes of students. The course of study began with arithmetic, geography, composition and "speaking," and ended with moral philosophy, trigonometry, Latin and Greek, with the option of substituting the French language for either of the others, "provided the tutor might be able to teach it."

In addition to this, the trustees were directed to name a location for the college. That body held a meeting and after repeated balloting decided upon Jackson county as the favored place. A committee was appointed, consisting of John Milledge, Abram Baldwin, George Walton, John Twiggs and Hugh Lawson, who should visit that section and select a site for the buildings.

The committee, in June, 1801, met at Billups' Tavern on the Lexington road and thence made tours of inspection to various localities,

The Augusta Chronicle of July 25, 1801, tells us that "the committee repaired to the county of Jackson and proceeded with attention and deliberation to examine a number of situations as well upon the tracts belonging to the University as upon others of private individuals. Having completed their views, they proceeded by ballot to make the choice, when the vote was unanimous in favor of a place belonging to Mr. Daniel Easley at the Cedar Shoals upon the north fork of the Oconee river and the same was resolved to be selected and chosen for the seat of the University of Georgia. For this purpose the tract, containing 633 acres, was purchased of Mr. Easley by Mr. Milledge, one of the committee, and made a donation of to the trustees; and it was called Athens."

When the grants by the State were made, there being very much land and very few people in Georgia the 40,000 acres could not have been worth very much. Governor Wilson Lumpkin, in a letter published in 1859, said that his father was the grantee of a large tract of land in the middle part of the State; and in 1783, sold 400 acres for a rifle and another tract of 400 acres for a saddle horse. If this be taken as a criterion, the munificent gift of the State when the grant was made, was worth about fifty rifles and as many saddle horses, from which, however, twelve horses should be deducted for the 5,000 acres lost in the adjustment of the South Carolina line.

But coming out of the war of the Revolution, her people impoverished, her commerce destroyed, her resources limited, the State had nothing else but land, and such as she had she freely gave, And though valueless, it may be, then, the lands afterwards yielded the University a permanent fund of one hundred thousand dollars, while the generosity of Governor Milledge brought her, first and last, thirty thousand dollars, and sustained her at sundry times when in dire distress. In recognition of her obligation to him, the University has called the chair of ancient languages "The Milledge Chair of Ancient Languages;" and in other resolutions, from time to time, have the trustees testified their appreciation of the gift.

Reference has been made to the loss of 5,000 acres in the State of South Carolina. The line between Georgia and South Carolina was determined to be the northern bank of the Savannah river at high water; and where it forked, the larger of the two streams should be considered a continuation of the Savannah. The Tugalo and the Keowee or Seneca, formed the first fork from its mouth and it became a question which was the larger. It was generally conceded that the Seneca was the principal stream and was therefore considered the boundary line between the States.

The lands between the rivers belonged then to Georgia, a part of which was the tract granted to the University, containing 5,000 acres, both fertile and valuable. Subsequent surveys, pretending to be more carefully made, determined that the Tugalo was the larger stream and that became the boundary line, thereby taking from the University her valuable lands. A committee of the trustees was appointed to ascertain and report the facts in connection with the loss of this tract. They reported that the tract was conceded to the State of South Carolina under the treaty of Beaufort, dated April 28, 1787; one of the clauses of which declared void all grants under the State of Georgia which were not registered in the State of South Carolina within twelve months from the date of the treaty. This treaty was ratified by the State of South Carolina on the 29th day of February, 1788, but such ratification was not communicated to the Governor of Georgia until May 26, 1788. The grant for the tract of land in question was sent to the proper office in South Carolina to be registered immediately after the reception of such communication, but it was not recorded.

The committee held that the treaty did not begin to operate until after the exchange of ratifications between the two States, and that the grant was presented for enrollment in ample time.

They also held that the tract was the property of the University prior to the treaty of Beaufort, and no power was vested in the commissioners of Georgia to transfer its property to any person whatsoever. The tract was at the time, (1799) reported to be settled by claimants under the State of South Carolina.

The trustees made every effort to retain their possession, employing lawyers to prosecute their claims before the Legislature of South Carolina and in the United Stated States Circuit Court, and appointing Thomas Peter Carnes, one of their number, a commissioner, it is supposed, to lobby. Having spent about about seven hundred dollars in this case, every effort to establish their title or effect a compromise having failed, after eight or ten years, the board abandoned the whole matter.

The year prior to the selection of a site for the college, to-wit, in November, 1800, Abram Baldwin, who had been a tutor at Yale College before his removal to Georgia, recommended for Professor of mathematics, Josiah Meigs, of Connecticut, whom he had favorably known as a scholar and a successful teacher.

Mr. Meigs was accordingly appointed "upon examination" (we suppose on probation) at a salary of fifteen hundred dollars and four hundred dollars to pay the expenses of removal to Athens. The following year, upon his arrival and introduction to the trustees, Mr. Baldwin resigned the presidency and Mr. Meigs was elected in his stead. The trustees directed Mr. Meigs to erect one or more log buildings for the college, and requested him to teach until enough students should attend to authorize the employment of a tutor.

The surroundings were unpromising, but nothing daunted, President Meigs set to work with zeal and vigor to organize a school in the woods.

He had a clearing made for the campus, a street was laid out, lots were staked off and a town projected. Several citizens from other parts of the State, came with their families and settled in the village.

The Augusta Chronicle thus describes the place in 1802:

"The river at Athens is about 150 feet broad; its waters rapid in their descent and has no low grounds. The site of the University is on the south (?) side and half a mile from the river. About 200 yards from the site and 300 feet above the river, in the midst of an extensive bed of rock, issues a copious spring of excellent water, and in its meanderings to the river several others are discovered. On the place is a new, well-built frame dwelling house, entirely equal to the accommodation of the president and his family. There is also another new house equal to a temporary school-room. The square of the University, containing 36½ acres, is laid off so as to comprehend the site, the houses and the spring. A street is laid off on the northern line of the square adjoining a village of lots in that direction. Besides the spring in the square, which is convenient to the village, there is one in the street and another back of the lots.

"Near Athens, Mr. Easley has an excellent flour mill, a saw and common grist mill with intention to add a cotton machine. To drive these, the rapids opposite Athens are slightly dammed, so as the ordinary supply of the river neither increases or diminishes the size of the pond. Besides the lesser fish of fresh waters, the shad, in their season, ascend the river as high as Athens in great perfection."

In order to begin these improvements a loan of five thousand dollars was asked of the Legislature, secured by mortgages on the Hancock county lands.

Mr. James Gunn, of Louisville, at this juncture, generously gave the University one thousand dollars, which, with a balance in hand, made about seven thousand dollars with which to begin operations.

Thus re-enforced, the trustees ordered the erection of the brick building which still stands, the earliest monument of their efforts, and known to every student as "Old College."

In spite of all difficulties, the institution grew. In November, 1803, President Meigs reported to the board that "three dwelling houses, three stores and a number of other valuable buildings have been erected on Front street. The students, citizens and inhabitants of Athens have been remarkably healthy during the year, and the spring has not failed as to quantity of water, but rather increased. The number of students has been between thirty and thirty-five. Twelve young gentlemen compose the Senior class. They are pursuing with laudable ambition and singular industry, a course of reading, study and academic exercises, and it is believed by the first of May next they will merit the first degree usually conferred in all regular collegiate establishments. The philosophical apparatus and a small selection of books are now on their way from London to Savannah, and I am confident it will be at least equal in real utility to any one belonging to any literary institution in the United States.

You have, in less than two years, done much if you compare the effects of your labors with those of the directors of the ancient similar institutions of William and Mary in Virginia, Cambridge in Massachusetts and Yale in Connecticut. None of those colleges have more than two hundred students, though they have been in existence from 100 to 170 years."

1803-1808.

In 1803, Hope Hull, Thomas P. Carnes and John Clarke were appointed a "Prudential Committee" of the trustees, a standing committee which has continued to the present day. Upon this committee devolved the duty of acting for the board in cases of emergency and of advising with the President at all times in the interests of the college.

A Grammar School was established too, with Rev. John Hodge as master, who was afterwards for a long time the Secretary of the trustees. The grammar school was for many years a valuable adjunct to the college in preparing boys for the higher classes. It was the outcome of President Meigs' complaint that there were so few academies in the State which gave their pupils the preparation necessary for admission to college—a complaint which may with justice be made at the present day. In later years the grammar school became unpopular from a custom of the faculty sentencing idle and refractory students to "three months in the grammar school," and in 1829 it was discontinued altogether.

The first commencement of the college occurred May 31, 1804. The president issued a "diploma" to Addin Lewis and others authorizing them to examine the senior class for degrees. Their report was presented to the trustees, who thereupon directed the president to confer "the degree of Bachelor of Arts upon Gibson Clarke, Augustin S. Clayton, Thomas Erwin, Jeptha V. Harris, William H. Jackson, James D. Jackson, James Wayne, Robert Rutherford, Williams Rutherford and William Williamson, alumni of this University; and that Ebenezer H. Cumming, Bachelor of Arts of Hampden Sidney College, be admitted ad eundem; and that Elijah Clarke, William Prince, John Forsyth and Henry Meigs be respectively admitted to the degree of Master of Arts."

The board then accompanied the students in procession to attend the commencement when the following exercises were performed:

PROGRAMME.

Sacred music (presumably congregational singing).

A prayer by the Rev. Mr. Marshall.

A salutatory oration by William H. Jackson.

An oration in favor of liberty and the superior advantages possessed by the United States over the governments of Europe, by Jeptha V. Harris.

An oration in praise of virtue and the necessity of enforcing it by example, Thomas Erwin.

A poem, descriptive of the means by which the lands of the Oconee were obtained—the former possessors described and contrasted with the present, and a prediction of its future greatness, by Augustin S. Clayton.

A dialogue (?) between Messrs. William Williamson, W. Jackson and J. Harris.

An oration exciting to gratitude to France for her assistance during the Revolutionary War and the cession of Louisiana, by James D. Jackson.

An oration on the dignity of man, and exhorting to agriculture and a knowledge of the arts and sciences, by Robert Rutherford.

An oration in praise of a representative government and the sciences, by William Williamson.

A dialogue (?) between Messrs. Jared Irwin, James D. Jackson, R. Rutherford and A. S. Clayton.

A disquisition on taste, by Ebenezer H. Cumming.

A valedictory oration, by Gibson Clarke.

The conferring of degrees.

A concluding prayer, by Rev. Hope Hull.

The board then returned to the college, where they declared that they "have with pleasure and satisfaction beheld the great and rapid improvement in science of the students of the University and felicitate themselves on the prospect of the institution becoming conspicuously and eminently useful to the community."

These commencement exercises, and so for several years afterwards, were held sub arboribus, in the open air.

Dr. Henry Hull has left the following account written in 1870:

"I have been present at every commencement of the college since 1804, though my memory only reaches back to that of 1806. On this occasion a large crowd of of people of all sorts, from the country and from towns, male and female, old and young, in every variety of costume, were assembled under a large bush arbor in front of the Old College, supplied with seats made of plank and slabs borrowed for the occasion from Easley's saw mill, resting on blocks or billets of wood which raised them from the ground. The stage for the faculty, trustees and speakers was erected at the side of the college building and the speakers when called came out of the door at the east end. The whole was built mainly by the students. The poles and brush for the arbor were growing in less than two hundred yards from the place where they were wanted; the cutting and dragging them was a mere frolic, and as 'many hands make light work,' the affair once begun was soon completed. The intelligent portion of the audience were of course interested in the orations; but the greater part looked on in stupid wonder as if on a pageant, understanding about as much of the English as of the Greek and Latin speeches, but all wrapt in profound attention."

A plat of the town and campus, made by direction of the board, shows at this time but few houses on the college grounds, the Old College; east of the president's house, a story and a half frame dwelling which was afterward removed to make room for the brick house now standing; the grammar school near the spot now occupied by Professor Strahan's house, and another wooden building on the present site of the Phi Kappa hall, the one spoken of in the Chronicle as "equal to a temporary school-room"—a single room twenty feet square, with a chimney at one end, an unglazed window at the other and a door in each side—these comprised the improvements of the campus. No fence enclosed the area, but all was open, while Front street, now known as Broad, was a lane cleared through the woods and doubtless full of stumps.

So encouraging were the prospects of the college that the trustees elected Mr. Addin Lewis to be tutor and Monsieur Petit de Clairville, professor of French. Mr.

Lewis was paid $800, and Monsieur Petit $400 per annum, which suggests the belief in the board that a Frenchman could exist on one-half of what it took to feed the Yankee.

The board further unanimously "resolved that the present collegiate buildings at Athens be hereafter denominated and known by the name of FRANKLIN COLLEGE."

The record shows that on Sunday, July 6, 1806, the board met at 8 o'clock and transacted business.

Application was made to the Legislature for authority to establish a lottery to raise three thousand dollars for the purchase of books. The request it seems, was refused —possibly because of the Sunday meeting—for lotteries were not condemned in that day, but on several occasions were legalized by the Legislature as late as 1865. Various donations, however, were made from time to time to the library, both in valuable books and in money.

It was the constant effort of the authorities to add to the library of the University, and the wisdom of their action is proved by the number of valuable works now on its shelves, many of which cannot be duplicated.

The necessity for a chapel was growing more and more pressing, but no funds were available for the purpose. In 1808, Rev. Hope Hull offered that if the board would give one hundred dollars for a belfry, he would cause to be erected a chapel 40 by 60 and 18 feet high. The offer was accepted; several trustees at once contributed and the chapel was built on the spot where the present chapel stands and served its purpose for twelve years.

In 1808, the Legislature declared that "whereas the Board of Trustees of the University consists of thirteen members, which is deemed too unwieldly and expensive, vacancies which may occur shall not be filled until the number is reduced to seven."

But apparently the trustees did not die or resign rapidly enough, for by the act of December 16, 1811, the number was reduced to five and the following persons were appointed: Peter Early, Edward Paine, Stephen Upson, John Griffin, William H. Crawford.

In 1816 the number was increased under another act by the appointment of David B. Mitchell, Thomas W. P. Charlton, Nicholas Ware, Henry Kollock, Augustin S. Clayton, James Meriwether, James M. Wayne, John Elliott, John A. Cuthbert and George M. Troup. Afterwards Duncan G. Campbell and Edward Harden were added and the board was authorized to fill its own vacancies.

In 1808, the board "learned with sincere regret that the number of students in the college are reduced from thirty to thirteen, and in the grammar school from forty to twenty-five." A committee was appointed "to enquire into the reports which affect the reputation of the president of the college as well as the moral character and discipline of the institution." What the result of this inquiry was, is not known, but two years later Mr. Meigs resigned the presidency, retaining the professorship of mathematics and natural philosophy. For the performance of these duties "with attention and dilligence" he was to receive the sum of $1,200 per annum.

Josiah Meigs, the first active president of the University of Georgia, was a native of Connecticut, the thirteenth child of his parents, born in 1757. His eldest brother, Colonel Return J. Meigs, was a distinguished officer of the Revolution and the father of the postmaster-general under President Monroe.

Josiah Meigs graduated at Yale College at the age of twenty-one. In 1781, he was appointed tutor of mathematics and natural philosophy and in 1794, professor in the same chair in that institution. His tenure of office at Yale was brief. The Dwights made a bitter fight on him on account of his "Jeffersonian Democracy" as we call it now—"Republicanism" it was known then—and the trustees relieved him of his chair in 1798.

A man of great energy, fearless, honest and pure, he gave all his abilities to the upbuilding of the college. In person he was tall and spare, with blue eyes and florid complexion, blessed with perfect health which was uninterrupted until his last and fatal illness. In manner he was affable and kind, but quickly aroused and especially excitable on the subject of politics. In fact, he suffered for his political views at Athens as he had at Yale, for it was the free expression of his opinions that brought about the immediate causes of his removal from the presidency and the loss of his professorship.

Mr. Meigs remained in Athens until 1812, when Mr. Jefferson, to whom he was well known, secured for him the appointment of surveyor-general, with his office at Cincinnati.

Upon the resignation of the presidency by Mr. Meigs, the Rev. Dr. Henry Kollock, of Savannah, was elected to the office, but declined.

Rev. Hope Hull, as chairman of the prudential committee, was appointed to act as president until the vacancy should be filled.

In 1811, Rev. John Brown, of Columbia, S. C., was elected and accepted the appointment.

During President Brown's administration the fortunes of the college steadily declined. Much was no doubt due to the stringency of the times, the period of the war of 1812 being included in his incumbency. But the lack of discipline and the general laxity of the faculty in the discharge of their duties, brought upon them the censure of the board.

Complaints were made of neglect by both faculty and students of the religious exercises of the college; of uncleanly rooms and slovenly habits; and even of offensive immorality. A student, fearless of the consequences, had the temerity to publish a libelous paper about the faculty, and the laws of the institution were held in contempt.

The attendance of students fell off, the income of the college diminished, and as a necessary result, salaries were cut down—that of the president to $1,000, of professors to $700 and $600. To meet pressing demands, a loan of $5,000 was negotiated, and an effort was made to raise funds by the sale of lands. Lots in Athens, west of what is now Lumpkin street were laid off in four-acre sections and offered for sale at a minimum price of $15 per acre on two years' time.

In this desperate state of affairs it was thought best to suspend for a time the exercises of the college, and President Brown resigned.

The fortunes of the college were at the lowest ebb in its history, and its best friends almost despaired of any revival of prosperity.

John Brown was born in County Antrim, Ireland, June 15, 1763, and came with his father to America, settling in Chester District, South Carolina. His educational advantages were very limited, eighteen months covering the period of his schooling, part of which time he was the schoolmate of General Andrew Jackson.

At sixteen years of age, he volunteered under General Sumter and fought gallantly until the close of the war of the Revolution in the campaigns against Tarleton and Cornwallis.

Feeling called to preach the gospel, Mr. Brown studied theology under Dr. McCorkle and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Concord in 1788.

In 1809, he was called to the chair of logic and moral philosophy in South Carolina College, and two years later was elected president of the University of Georgia, which office he held until 1816.

Dr. Brown was distinguished for his great excellence of character, his humility and generosity. He was essentially a good man. Rev. Dr. Talmadge used to call him "Our Apostle John." He had a vigorous mind and a fine command of language, but though a man of great firmness of character, he was defective in some of the essential qualities of a teacher, especially failing both to excite the interest and to hold the attention of his students. Added to this, his want of the executive talent needful in the head of an institution of learning, made his administration a signal failure. Conscious himself of this, Dr. Brown resigned the presidency in 1816, and retired to his home near Athens, where he lived for several years, doing good, and honored of all men.

During the first thirty years of its corporate existence, the University had sold its lands except in Clarke county and had in hand $150,000 of notes, secured by mortgage, as the proceeds.

Upon the interest collected upon these notes with occasional encroachments on the principal as it was paid, the institution had erected its buildings and paid its current expenses. There being no regular income, however, upon which it could rely, the Legislature passed the act of December 15, 1815, authorizing the Governor to advance to the board of trustees, two-thirds the face value of those notes upon their being deposited in the State treasury. No money was to be paid for them, but upon the organization of the Bank of the State of Georgia, the Governor subscribed for one thousand shares for the University of Georgia and upon the surrender of the notes and mortgages, transferred the stock to the trustees.

The trustees were prohibited by law from selling or otherwise disposing of this stock, but the dividends could be used for the various requirements of the University.

The income from the investment was guaranteed by the State to amount to $8,000 per annum. For several years, during its most successful period, the bank stock paid annually ten thousand dollars, but with all other concerns of like character it was lost in the wreck of the Civil War. Despite this, however, the State never repudiated its obligation, but regularly and promptly paid the interest from the treasury. The constitution of 1877 recognized the debt of one hundred thousand dollars and the annual interest has become a fixed charge upon the State.

With the prospect of a stated income, a reorganization of the college was effected.

Dr. Robert Finley, of New Jersey, was elected president and took the oath of office in May, 1817.

The Legislature advanced the board ten thousand dollars on the pledge of its surplus bonds. Thus assisted, the trustees appropriated one thousand dollars for the library, and made a contract for a home for the president to be built for eight thousand dollars. This is the brick dwelling east of Old College, which replaced the old frame dwelling.

President Finley entered upon his office with zeal and ability. Presiding at the commencement in June, he impressed the audience with his ease and dignity. It was, however, a commencement only in name—there were in all but twenty-eight students in the college. After the closing exercises, Dr. Finley set out to make a tour of the State in order to become better acquainted with the people and to secure their patronage and their aid in restoring and rebuilding the institution. In this tour he was remarkably successful, but his usefulness was suddenly cut short by his untimely death. Returning home in September, he was prostrated with a bilious attack, common at that season, and lingering until October 3d, he sank in death.

Upon the death of President Finley, Rev. Nathan S. S. Beman was elected to the vacant office. That gentleman at first accepted, but in deference to the wishes of an invalid wife, afterwards declined the appointment.

Rev. Moses Waddell was next elected president. Mr. Waddell was born in Rowan county, N. C., July 29, 1770. He attended a neighboring school, studying with such diligence, that when he was but fourteen years of age, he was invited to take a school at a little distance from his home, with the stipulated remuneration of seventy dollars a year and his board. In 1786, he came to Greene county, Georgia with his parents and opened another school. In 1789, he professed conversion and joined the Presbyterian church. Subsequently, in view of preparing himself to preach the gospel, he went to Hampden Sidney College, entering the Senior class in 1791. For some years after he was licensed, he preached and taught at different places, finally locating at Willington, S. C. In the meantime, he had among his pupils, William H. Crawford and John C. Calhoun, men who in after life became the peers of any this country has ever produced.

Mr. Waddell was married first to a sister of John C. Calhoun, who survived her marriage but little more than a year. In 1800, he was married a second time to Miss Eliza Pleasants, of Virginia.

When the University of Georgia was lying prostrate under the misfortune of President Finley's death, superadded to the distressing condition in which he found it, it was felt that Dr. Waddell was the only man who could undertake its resuscitation with any hope of success.

The trustees sent him an urgent invitation to assume the presidency. Though very reluctant to face the responsibility of such a task, he yielded to the arguments of the committee who visited him, and removed to Athens in 1819.

The reputation of Dr. Waddell, which had preceded him, added to his energy and high character, soon raised the enrollment of students from seven to more than one hundred.

His discipline was firm without severity and only those who trifled with him felt how severe he could be.

The problem of the disposition of the students had long exercised the faculty and trustees. At first they boarded anywhere in the neighborhood of the college; then they were required to room in the Old College. Later, by an act of the Legislature, they were permitted to "board at any place within the town or vicinity of Athens, Provided, they board with moral, respectable families, of which the president of the college shall judge." Then Commons were provided, a steward's hall established and maintained for a dozen or more years. By resolution of the trustees in 1820, the quality of board required was: "For breakfast, a sufficiency of wholesome cold meat with wheaten flour biscuit or loaf bread, butter, tea or coffee. For dinner, a course of bacon or salted beef, with a suitable proportion of corn bread and at least two kinds of vegetables, and on Wednesday, to have an after course of pies, puddings or pancakes. For each supper, a plentiful supply of tea or milk, with a sufficiency of wheaten flour biscuit and butter." Truly a substantial bill of fare and not open to the charge of extravagance.

The board also declared that "students on Sabbath afternoons must confine their walks to one mile, provided, this healthful and innocent indulgence is executed free from any violation of the laws of the college."

In 1822, a contract was let for the building of "New College" at $24,980. The Philosophical Hall had been completed a year before and was used for the college chapel. In the second story, the library was arranged, and there the trustees held their meetings. After the completion of New College in 1823, the library and apparatus were transferred to that building.

The campus, which seems to have been open at the time, was ordered to be closed "with posts and plank in front, and common rails with stakes and riders on the other sides."

Dr. Waddell's entire administration was one of strength and success. The college grew in influence and in public favor. The trustees gave their cordial support to the president, who on his part, seemed to have no other desire than to raise the institution which had been confided to his care, to the highest standard of morality and scholarship. In this he succeeded beyond the expectations of the most sanguine. From the plane to which Dr. Waddell raised it, the University has never receded, and when the times and the circumstances of the people are considered, it was hardly possible for any man to have done more. His discipline was never relaxed. To the students he was kind, but always firm. He commanded their respect and demanded their obedience.

During Dr. Waddell's tenure of office, the minimum age of admission of students was fixed at thirteen for the freshman, fourteen for the sophomore, fifteen for the junior and sixteen for the senior class.

It was said that the president advocated administering discipline by flogging to the freshmen and sophomores, but the board thought that mode of punishment incompatible with the dignity of a great university. In deference to his opinions, however, the faculty were authorized to remand refractory students to the grammar school, where the principal, Mr. Moses W. Dobbins, a nephew and namesake of the president, wielded the birch with skill and liberality. A student would submit to anything short of expulsion rather than be sentenced to the grammar school.

A law was passed at one time that "no student of the grammar school should engage in any dramatic performance in the town of Athens, either in term time or vacation."

Under the laws of that day, students were subject to militia duty. They organized a company among themselves and made a great frolic of the whole affair. "Muster day" proved at last so disastrous to study and good order, that the governor was appealed to to withdraw the arms which had been furnished them.

In 1829, Dr. Waddell sent in his resignation to the trustees. Efforts were made to induce him to withdraw it, but his determination was taken. Arrangements were made for suitable ceremonies of a public and final leave-taking at the close of the commencement exercises, and on the day of his departure from home, the faculty and students marched to his house in a body to bid him farewell.

Alonzo Church, then professor of mathematics, was elected to succeed President Waddell.

Dr. Church was a native of Vermont and a graduate of Middlebury College. Soon after his graduation he went to Eatonton, Georgia, to take charge of the academy at that place. He there met and married Miss Sarah Trippe, a lady of superior accomplishments and rare beauty. Coming to Athens in 1819, as professor of mathematics, Dr. Church conducted his department with eminent success and so impressed the board by his force of character, that upon the retirement of President Waddell, he was at once unanimously chosen in his place.

In person, Dr. Church was tall and well-proportioned, of dark complexion, with lustrous black eyes and hair, graceful in carriage and dignified in bearing. He was of a quick temper and absolutely fearless, but had great self-control. Well behaved students had respect and affection for him, but the disorderly feared and avoided him more than any other member of the faculty. He was a rigid disciplinarian, prompt to correct and rebuke the slightest indication of disorder or inattention in his class-room.

In 1830, the University sustained a serious loss in the destruction by fire of the New College, with the library, now a most valuable one, and all the scientific apparatus. It was supposed to have caught in one of the dormitory rooms, and there being no means whatever in the town for extinguishing fires, it was a total loss excepting the walls. There was nothing to be done but to appeal to the State for help.

The Senatus Academicus sent up a memorial to the Legislature setting forth the fact that the forty thousand dollars of surplus bonds and mortgages deposited in the treasury in 1816 against the issue of one thousand shares of bank stock, had been collected and covered into the treasury to the credit of the State. In behalf of the University the Senatus asked that this sum be turned over to the trustees to be used in rebuilding the college, in purchasing new apparatus and instruments, in refurnishing a library and for other wants of the institution. In response to this request the General Assembly appropriated six thousand dollars annually from 1830 to 1841, and in addition thereto for immediate use, advanced to the University ten thousand dollars, which was afterwards repaid in annual payments of one thousand dollars. With these funds the burned building was rebuilt at the cost of $12,349. The present chapel was erected on the site of the old wooden one of 1808; the "Ivy Building" was built for a new library and cabinet of minerals; two new chairs were established—natural philosophy and modern languages—and a botanical garden was planned and planted.

During the intense political excitement between the

Clarke and Troup parties, which perhaps was not surpassed by the antagonism of the Democrats to the Republicans in the hottest days of reconstruction, serious complaints were made by the Clarke party of the vicious influence of the University. It was charged that the trustees were all Troup men and that only Troup men were put in the faculty, and worse than all, that their boys went to college and came home imbued with the damnable heresies of the Troup party, and forsaking the principles of their fathers, deserted to the ranks of the enemy.

This was too grave a charge to be ignored. Consequently, in 1830, the Legislature enacted a law increasing the number of trustees to twenty-eight, giving an equal representation on the board to the two political factions.

At the request of the trustees in 1830, the Senatus Academicus appointed annually fifteen persons as a Board of Visitors to attend the examinations of the students preceeding commencement and report to that body. The appointment of this board after the abolition of the Senatus Academicus was delegated to the Governor, and and their powers were enlarged.

In 1842, the income of the University was seriously impaired by the loss of the annual appropriation by the State of six thousand dollars, leaving the total available income less than twelve thousand dollars. This reduction in its funds made necessary a reduction in the expenses of the College. A reorganization of the faculty ensued, accompanied by a reduction of salaries.

The increasing demand for city lots, added to the financial straits of the College, seemed to justify the sale of the remainder of the Milledge donation. Accordingly, by direction of the board, Dr. Hull surveyed and platted the lands, which were advertised to be sold, excepting the thirty-seven acres comprising the campus, they being by statute, inalienable. The lots sold at that time, including those immediately around the campus and westward across the Tanyard branch, yielded eighty-five hundred dollars. It was thought best to reserve the lots in what was known as Cobbham until another time, and indeed, they were not offered for sale until 1857, when twelve thousand dollars more was realized.

The funds arising from the first sale enabled the Board to erect two dwellings on the campus—Professor Waddell's and that one opposite occupied by Dr. Brantly and afterwards by Professor Rutherford.

Dr. Church, with his masterful character, had long dominated both faculty and trustees. He had views on the proper conduct of a college, which amounted to convictions. The officer who could not or would not come up to his standard, or who could not accept his views, was in his opinion not the officer the college needed. Complaints were made, without mincing matters, of incompetency or of neglect of duty.

The first gun was fired by the President in his annual report to the board in 1855. Said he, "Mere science will not qualify a man for a professor. He may be eminent in his attainments and even felicitous in his ability to teach, and yet be a curse to the institution. There must be moral and social qualifications as well as literary and scientific. No man who has not been long and intimately connected with an institution of this kind as an instructor can estimate the influence for good or for ill which a professor exerts, apart from his mere daily instructions in science. Every professor unless willing to devote his time and labor and ease, if necessary to promote the highest prosperity of the institution, cannot successfully accomplish the purpose for which he has been placed in office. But above all, I am constrained to say that an indispensable qualification to make the perfect teacher is piety. I do not mean that he should be a mere professor of religion, a member of some Christian church. The man whose life is inconsistent with his Christian profession leads students to despise him and to regard true religion with distrust and treat it with disrespect." Wise old man!

On whom the President was expending his ammunition when he described the ideal professor we do not know. Certain it is that description cannot be surpassed.

The history of the University of Georgia, her experience with her professors, the success of her students, and the testimony of the alumni, have proved the correctness of Dr. Church's estimate. The conscientious, painstaking professor with strong religious convictions, is the one who has won the confidence of the student and impressed him with lessons of truth.

A few months later, the President again addressed the board in no uncertain tone. In the meantime he had tendered his resignation and this meeting was called to consider the nomination of his successor. Said he, "The number of students present at this time is seventy-nine, and I am constrained to say that even with this small number, the discipline of the institution is far worse than I have ever known it during the thirty-seven years of my connection with it."

Then he proceeds to state what he considers the cause of the decline. The effect of this communication was an immediate resolution that all the members of the faculty be requested to furnish the board with their respective resignations forthwith, with a view to the reorganization of said faculty. The request was complied with, with apparent cheerfulness. All the resignations were accepted and an election of a reorganized faculty held December 10th, 1856.

Dr. Church did not much longer remain in office. His final resignation took effect January 1, 1859, when he retired with a widowed daughter, the only one of his family left in Athens, to a residence a little out of town. There in peace and in quietude, but with failing health, he lived until, during the following year, the summons to the presence of the Master came.

In 1859, a new scheme of organization of the University was adopted by the board, which was essentially as follows:

1. To establish an institute combining all the instruction given in a well regulated village academy and in the Freshman and Sophomore classes in college, and having sufficient capacity to board all its pupils from a distance.

2. To establish a college proper with only Junior and Senior classes, under five professors.

3. To establish University schools, independent of the college and of each other, viz.: a law school, a school of agriculture, of medicine, of civil engineering and a commercial school.

4. The establishment of scholarships by donations or devises.

5. The conferring of honors and degrees.

6. All departments to be under a Chancellor, who shall be the head of the institution.

The law school was at once established under the supervision of Joseph H. Lumpkin, Thos. R. R. Cobb and William Hope Hull, and steps were taken which resulted in the existing connection between the Medical College in Augusta and the University.

This scheme was reported to the Senatus Academicus, at what proved to be its last meeting in November, 1859, and was adopted by that body.

The act of December 4, 1859, declares that, "Whereas, experience has shown that the body known as the Senatus Academicus on account of the hurried manner in which its sessions are generally held, has a tendency to defeat rather than promote the objects for which it is designed, therefore be it enacted that the body Senatus Academicus shall be abolished and all its rights, powers, duties and privileges shall be given to the Board of Trustees of the University of Georgia, in whom alone shall be vested the government of the said University, subject to the General Assembly of this State."

The appointment of fifteen persons annually as a board of visitors to attend the examination of the classes of the University hitherto made by the Senatus Academicus was by the same act vested in the governor.

By virtue of this act, the Senatus Academicus, that "ancient ægis of the University," was abolished after an existence of more than seventy years.

From the sale of the remaining lots in "Cobbham," the available assets of the University in bonds and notes amounted to $33,600. It was determined that this should be appropriated to erect new buildings. Accordingly, contracts were given out for the erection of the present library building at $11,600; the "Mess Hall" on Lumpkin street at $4,000, and the University High School, now called "Rock College," at $23,000.

The last two proved unprofitable investments. The mess hall scheme was not even attempted, and the house was for years tenanted by renters, excepting a brief occupancy by a professor. But in 1898, the scheme was revived with such success that it has become a potent factor in college life.

The High School was opened in January, 1862, with most flattering prospects, but the varying fortunes of ensuing years made impossible the development of the plan for which it was intended.

The resignation of President Church left the college without an executive head.

The board seemed at a loss to whom to turn, and were on the point of adjourning without action, when a trustee, who had taken his seat for the first time, arose and said, that he could point the board to a gentleman in every way fitted for the place by scholarship, eminent piety, broad culture and experience in teaching. That man was Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, of Alabama.

So cordial was his endorsement and so convincing was the testimony to his worth that a committee was appointed to wait on Dr. Lipscomb at his home, notify him of his election as chancellor and urge his acceptance. The committee visited Alabama without delay. Dr. Lipscomb, after a brief consideration of the offer, accepted the appointment and assumed its duties the following year.

More than passing notice is due to some of the gentlemen who had severed their connection with the University. The LeContes were native Georgians, both alumni and honor men of the University. Their difficulties here were by no means due to incapacity or lack of effective teaching. Both men of piety and pure lives, lovable in their characters, devoted to scientific research, they had the active talent which has put them in the front rank of America's savants. They, with Professors Broun and Venable, represented the advanced thought of the day. They believed the University should be at least a high-grade college, and that University methods should be introduced at Athens. Dr. Church, conservative and wise, opposed radical changes being made and declared that the University system was unsuited to the age at which students attended this college. The young professors espoused the geological doctrine of the creation of the world. Dr. Church abhorred it as the rankest heresy. The one party were disposed to relax the exactions of police duty on the campus and to put more responsibility for good conduct on the boys themselves. Dr. Church regarded strict discipline as the foundation stone of the college edifice.

With such divergent views, a rupture was inevitable, and the board, themselves conservative almost to "old fogyism," sustained the president when the issue was made.

The LeContes went to Columbia, S, C., and after the war, to the University of California, at Berkely, building an enviable reputation as teachers and scientists. Dr. John LeConte died a few years ago the president of that University. Dr. Joseph LeConte, full of honors, passed away during the present year.

Professor Venable's connection with the University was too brief to make much of her history. He was known during the War betwee the States as Adjutant to the great commander Gen. Robert E. Lee, and for many years since, was Professor of mathematics at the University of Virginia.

The five years following Dr. Lipscomb's inauguration were not conducive to study nor to the growth of the University in any respect.

The fall of 1860, pregnant with important issues, stirred the whole South, and the election of Mr. Lincoln, followed by the secession of South Carolina and, a few weeks later, by the secession of Georgia, kept the students and the faculty at the highest pitch of excitement. The year 1861 opened with one hundred and twenty-three students enrolled. Before midsummer, seventy-five had enlisted and were then in the army, and nearly all the others were preparing to volunteer.

There was drilling and studying of tactics, and marching and countermarching. With or without permission of parents or faculty, the boys left for their homes or to join the companies already in the camps, or those being formed for service in the army, little dreaming what the next four years held in store for them. The attendance steadily decreased and each session opened with fewer numbers than the close of the preceding one.

President Davis was petitioned by the chancellor in behalf of the University, to exempt from conscription all college students under twenty-one years of age. The president replied that he had no control in that matter, which was determined by the act of Congress.

Times grew harder. The income of the college was seriously diminished. Salaries were reduced at first twenty per cent. and afterwards one hundred per cent., the chancellor receiving $250 per annum in Confederate money.

In October, 1863, the college was closed in consequence of a proclamation of Governor Brown, calling out State troops and home guard companies for the defense of Georgia after the capture of Chattanooga by the Federals. This proclamation took away the chancellor, all the professors and the students, the most of whom joined a company raised in Athens and attached to a regiment commanded by Dr. Mell. The dormitory buildings were now occupied by the families of refugees from New Orleans, Mobile and Savannah. The High School was converted into an hospital. From this time until January, 1866, history is silent as to the University.

But though the University was silent, not so her alumni. They were busily engaged in making a history, whose pages glow with bold words and brave deeds, with victories and with privations which have not been surpassed and which will never be forgotten. To repeat their deeds, would be to recite the story of every campaign from Sumter to Appomattox. To name the heroes of the war, would be to call the roll of half the catalogue of students. From secession to surrender, the sons of the University illustrated their Alma Mater in field and forum, proving themselves in both, the peers of the best men of America.

The old campus presented a woeful appearance after the close of the war. The walks were overgrown with grass, weeds grew rampant everywhere, fences were broken or burned, windows demolished, and the interior of the chapel and dormitories hacked and smoked, and in every way disfigured by their late tenants, the Federal soldiers.

The summer of 1865, Dr. Lipscomb preached the commencement sermon at the Presbyterian church. The trustees at that meeting determined to re-open the college, notwithstanding the distressing condition of the people.

The chancellor and faculty were requested to have the premises put in order and to make arrangements to resume the work of the institution.

Gen. Steedman, the military governor of Georgia, had the garrison removed from the campus to the High School. The buildings were thoroughly purified and whitewashed and some semblance of respectability was imparted to them. In New College a boarding house for students was opened under the direction of the chancellor.

The one session plan was adopted, having all the vacation in the summer, and has continued ever since to be the law of the college.

In that year of 1865, occurred the death of Hon. Asbury Hull, for forty-seven years the honored secretary and treasurer of the University of Georgia. Though never a member of the board, his advice and counsel were always sought in questions of interest to the college and his excellent judgment and marked executive ability were often invoked to aid the purposes of the trustees.

Dr. Lipscomb, Dr. Mell, Mr. Rutherford, Mr. Waddell and Dr. Jones were in their places on January 5th, 1866, and the session opened with seventy-eight students present. For a few years after the war, the class of students was unlike any that had ever attended college before. Many of them were grown men and most of them had been through the costly experience of a four year's war, with all its lessons of endurance and self-denial. They had not come for pastime or to idle away their time. They were in dead earnest. It was a question of food and raiment, a struggle for existence. Poorly fitted for a college curriculum, it was only by hard work that they kept up with the requirements. But those were the men who a few years later swayed the sceptre of the State and redeemed Georgia from the blighting curse of the carpet-bagger. All honor to them and their persevering industry.

At the session of the board in July, 1866, a professional school of engineering was established and General Martin L. Smith was elected professor. General Smith was a distinguished engineer officer of the war and would have brought great ability to his chair, but unfortunately died before the opening of the term. The work of the school was postponed until the next year, when Capt. L. H. Charbonnier was appointed to the vacancy.

The annual commencement, which had been advanced to July, was now restored to its old date in August. This action of the board, it was said, was due to the ladies of Athens. As one of the trustees said, "it was a question of watermelons."

In 1868, the number of students reached 354. However, of these, 132 were students in the high school department, many of them mature men, old soldiers seeking to make up the lost years they had spent in the field. The tuition fees amounted to $15,000 and the prospects of the college warranted the establishment of a chair of History and Political Science, to which Hon. Alexander H. Stephens was elected, but which he declined on account of ill health.

The next year the time-honored custom of before breakfast recitations was abolished and the hasty morning toilet, the hurry and scurry to answer at morning prayers was henceforth but a memory of the past, no doubt to the delight of both students and professors.

It may be doubted whether the early prayers ever found the students in a devotional frame of mind. Many a boy has appeared in the chapel two minutes out of bed, sans socks, sans trousers, sans coat, his slippers and dressing gown alone saving him from the charge of indecency.

For some time efforts had been made to arouse among the alumni a greater interest in the University. The suggestion was made by the chancellor, adopted by the board and authorized by legislative enactment, to add four more trustees, one to be elected annually by the alumni society. The trustees first elected under this law were N. J. Hammond, Pope Barrow, A. O. Bacon and John C. Rutherford. This new privilege, added to the action of the board setting apart a day at commencement for the alumni orations, brought an increased attendance upon their meetings for some years.

In 1862, by an act of Congress, thirty thousand acres of public lands for each representative of each State were appropriated to the States for the "maintenance and support of at least one college, where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such a manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life."

Owing to Georgia being out of the Union at the time, and very busily engaged in getting back in for several years afterwards, it was not until March, 1866, that our Legislature accepted the grant. The same year the governor was directed to apply for and receive the scrip, sell it to the best advantage and invest the proceeds of the sale in bonds of this State and disburse the interest of said investment for the support and maintenance of a college, such as was contemplated by the act of congress.

The "Land-scrip," so-called, was a warrant of the United States Government authorizing the State, or its transferree, to locate so many acres of public lands not otherwise appropriated and sell the same for the purposes of the act.

The governor sold this scrip to parties in Ohio for $243,000, which amount as a principal fund is held forever without diminution by the State.

On March 30, 1872, a contract was made between the governor and the trustees of the University, by which the latter administered the fund.

That year the attendance at the University reached the highest point in its history—318—of whom 94 were State college students and 54 were high school students.

The necessity for more room for laboratories and class-rooms was so apparent, and the prospects of the college so flattering, that the city of Athens, by a vote of its citizens, donated $25,000 to the University for a building to supply the want. This was done in recognition of the services the University had done the town as its virtual founder, and for years its main support.

The following year, Chancellor Lipscomb resigned.

Andrew Adgate Lipscomb was a native of Virginia. His boyhood was spent in the historic region of Manassas, and every foot of that fiercely contested ground was familiar and its features distinct in his recollection. Dr. Lipscomb was a scholar of great erudition and a lecturer of great power. As a sermonizer he was prone to get beyond the depth of his audience, but at times, both in pulpit and on the rostrum, he rose to flights of eloquence rarely equalled in a land of orators. He was essentially a benevolent man, large-hearted and loving. It was his fault, if fault it could be called, to think two well of everyone. He never recognized the "old Adam," nor admitted the existence of "pure cussedness" in any boy. Though abhorring discipline in its strictest sense, Dr. Lipscomb, by personal appeals to the better nature of his boys—"My dear boys," as he was wont to call them—and by earnest personal interviews, awakened in many a student aspirations to a nobler life. While chancellor he inaugurated the Sabbath afternoon service for students. In these lectures he was at his best. Brief—never longer than half-hour—pointed, and perfect gems of thought and delivery, they attracted large audiences from the city, taxing the utmost capacity of the prayer-room. A master of elocution, a thorough rhetorician and an enthusiast in teaching, the careers of his pupils, many of them prominent men in this and other states, is the measure of Dr. Lipscomb's success.

Chancellor Lipscomb was succeeded by Rev. Henry H. Tucker, D. D.

The first annual report of Chancellor Tucker divulged a woeful condition as to the discipline in the college.

The Doctor declared the scholarship medal system a failure and the society medals a source of great trouble, and altogether found much to criticise that was left over from the last administration.

The result was a reorganization of the faculty. The plan of reorganization declared the chancellor's office to be one of honor and distinction without salary. It was his duty to preside at commencement and to confer degrees, the faculty being left to select its own chairman. This much of the plan, however, was repealed soon after to the extent of making the chancellor also a professor as he had always been.

During the three years of Dr. Tucker's administration, the roll of matriculates steadily decreased from 266 to 116. Dr. Tucker attributed the decline to the continued changes in management in the University and the utter unfitness of the University system, as adopted, to the class of immature students who attend our colleges.

Whatever were the true causes of the decline, the responsibility of the Chancellor, justly or unjustly, was not questioned, and the trustees cut the Gordian knot by asking for his resignation.

Henry Holcombe Tucker was born in Warren county, Georgia, May 10, 1819. He entered the University of Pennsylvania, but graduated at Columbian College, in Washington City, in 1838. He taught in the Southern Female College at LaGrange, and in 1853, was offered the presidency of Wake Forest College in North Carolina, which he declined.

On the re-organization of Mercer University in 1866, Dr. Tucker was chosen its president. During his incumbency the college was removed from Penfield to Macon, largely through his influence.

Dr. Tucker was a great preacher. His thoughts were original, his expressions clear cut and quaint, and his delivery forcible. It was a treat to hear him. There was a crispness about his preaching as refreshing as the air of an autumn morning. His mind was very active, and he was quick as a flash at repartee. In his home he was a charming host, and his charity to the needy was boundless. None but he knew how helpful he was to the poor.

Rev. Patrick H. Mell, D. D., was elected by the board to succeed Chancellor Tucker.

The opening session of Chancellor Mell's administration was marked by a loss as serious as any the University had ever sustained—the untimely death of Professor Waddell. William Henry Waddell inherited all the ability as a teacher which his father and grandfather had acquired through years of experience. Graduating with the first honor in 1852, he taught a year in a Mississippi school. Elected tutor in the University, he entered the faculty, of which he remained a member until his death.

In 1878, a proposition was made to have four additional trustees appointed from the Georgia State Agricultural Society, in which the board refused to acquiesce. Two years later, however, a bill was passed by the Legislature which provided for that addition and the gentlemen elected by the Society, Messrs. W. H. Felton, J. H. Fannin, L. F. Livingston and S. M. H. Bird took their seats with the board. The year 1878 witnessed also the expansion of the branch college system. The school at Dahlonega had previously been incorporated into the University and was receiving annually $2,000 from the land-scrip fund for its support. Now schools at Milledgeville, Cuthbert, Thomasville and later at Hamilton, came forward with offers of land and houses, asking that they, too, be adopted into the family. The theory of the branch college idea was that they would become feeders to the University, sending their graduates to us to take advanced or special courses in the completion of their education. As a matter of fact, they became not feeders, but competitors. The growing conviction in the minds of the trustees of the injury done the University by this course resulted in the withdrawal of financial aid from all excepting Dahlonega, followed by a total divorce from Cuthbert and, practically, a separation from the others.

Much confusion and no little dissatisfaction resulted from the varied rates of tuition charges which had existed since the organization of the State College.

Under the contract with Governor Smith, a certain number of students were to be admitted free, while others were charged a fixed sum in that college. A higher sum was charged in Franklin college. There were certain free scholarships granted to the city of Athens and there were still other conditions under which a student's charges were remitted. In spite of the higher charges in Franklin College, however, more students were registered in that than in the State College, doubtless, because the student preferred the course whose degree would be of most value to him after graduation.

At this stage of affairs, the subject of free tuition was considered by the board. Approximate estimates showed that by charging a matriculation fee of ten dollars for each student, the income of the University would authorize free tuition with the aid from the State of $2,000 for one year to offset the tuition fees then received. But some of the bonds in which certain funds arising from the sale of lots had been invested, were about to become due. Unless these funds could be reinvested at the same rate of interest and that interest be permanent, the trustees were not assured that the plan could be adopted.

The whole matter was presented to the Legislature through a committee of the board and a statement of the facts made, which resulted in the Act of September 26, 1881.

This act, "To enable the trustees of the University of Georgia to inaugurate a system of free tuition in that institution;" also provides that whenever the University shall present any of its valid matured bonds of the State to the treasury, it shall be the duty of the governor to issue to the trustees in lieu of those matured bonds, an obligation in writing, in the nature of a bond, in an amount equal to the principal of the matured bonds and falling due fifty years from date of issue, bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum and not redeemable by the State before that time nor negotiable nor transferable by the trustees. The rate of interest est was afterwards reduced to three and one-half per cent.

After the passage of this act, tuition was made free in all the academic schools of the University.

Chancellor Mell's administration was a decade of prosperity to the University. He brought to the office long experience as a college professor, strong convictions of duty, a well-digested policy and the confidence of the powerful religious denomination to which he belonged. He at once set to work to gain more students, and to that end, his efforts, never flagged. The college dormitories were converted into boarding houses—Old College, under the fatherly care of Mr. Peter A. Summey, and New College under Mr. Richardson—and efforts were made to give a semblance of home to those uninviting walls. This last was a compromise between the chancellor and trustees. Dr. Mell bitterly opposed the dormitory system. He regarded it as an open bid for noise and disorder and idleness. He recommended their utter abolition and the scattering of students among the various homes and boarding houses of the town.

But the board did not see its way to abandon its only means of furnishing cheap board, and the college boarding house was the outcome. It served a purpose, but its influence was neither educative nor refining.

In 1879, it was stated to the trustees that Mr. Charles F. McCay, formerly Professor of Mathematics, desired to make a donation for the benefit of the University with the view that it should be kept at compound interest for given time before being used. The board declared its willingness to accept it upon the conditions named.

It is estimated that about one hundred years will have expired before the interest of this fund can be available under the trust. In that time, if no disaster befall, the fund will have amounted to about $10,000,000, and the University will have an income from that source of $500,000, with which to pay the salaries of its professors.

In 1882, the University was a recipient of another donation more immediately useful, but in a different way —the Charles McDonald Brown Scholarship Fund.

This endowment was established at the University by Hon. Joseph E. Brown, ex-Governor of Georgia, who was for over a quarter of a century a member of the Board of Trustees of the University.

Charles McDonald Brown died while prosecuting his studies at the University.

Governor Brown, desiring to advance the interests of the University, and aid worthy young men of the State in their efforts to get an education, and, at the same time, wishing to perpetuate the name of his deceased son, donated to the University fifty thousand dollars, money that might have been possessed by his son, if he had lived, to be known as "The Charles McDonald Brown Scholarship Fund." The interest on this amount is to be lent out to worthy young men, who, unaided, would not be able to acquire a University education, on the condition that they refund the money thus lent as soon as they can make it, after providing for their livelihood in an economical manner.

These two notable donations recall the gift from Mr. James Gunn Jr., in 1802, of one thousand dollars, the first private gift in money to the University, and coming at a time when sorely needed. This was followed in 1817 by a contribution of the same sum by Mr. John Marks, of Madison county, for the purchase of philosophical apparatus. From that time no private purse strings were unloosed in behalf of the University until 1854, when Dr. William Terrell, of Hancock county, sent communication to the trustees, tendering $20,000, to provide for lectures on agriculture. This liberal donation was accepted by the board in resolutions expressing their appreciation of Dr. Terrell's patriotic purpose, and the "Terrell Professorship of Agriculture" was created.

In 1859, Gen. Robert Taylor, of Athens, left by will $5,000 for a scholarship in the college. The funds in which this bequest was invested were rendered valueless by the war and so lost to the institution.

Mention has been made of the $25,000 given by the city of Athens in 1873 for the erection of Moore College. This timely donation enabled the University to greatly enlarge its capacity for usefulness when the necessity was upon it to do so.

The Gilmer Fund can hardly be classed with donations, since the University derives no benefit from it, even remotely. Governor Gilmer left by will $15,000, "to form a perpetual fund for educating teachers of reading, writing and arithmetic, or to otherwise increase the qualifications of schoolmasters of Georgia for properly instructing the children of the State." The income from this fund is paid over to the State Normal School.

A brief illness following upon prostration brought Chancellor Mell to his bed, from which he never arose. On January 26, 1888, he breathed his last.

Patrick Hues Mell was born in Liberty county, Georgia, July 19, 1814. At the age of seventeen, he taught a country school, saving enough to take him to Amherst College, Mass., where he graduated, paying his expenses there by teaching during vacation. After leaving college, he taught at Springfield and at Hartford, but declined flattering offers there to return to his native State.

Upon the recommendation of Governor Troup, he was elected professor of ancient languages in Mercer

College in 1842, and twelve years later was called to the same chair in the University of Georgia. Here he spent the remainder of his days.

As a preacher of the gospel, Dr. Mell ranked high. He made no pretense of oratory, nor even reached the point of eloquence, but the exhaustive analysis of his subject and the close reasoning of his argument, held his hearers' strict attention and left them with the sense that there was nothing more to be said. He had the unbounded confidence of his own denomination and held the office of Moderator of the Southern Baptist Convention for many years, being annually re-elected until the last year of his life.

The annual session of the board following the death of Dr. Mell, was one of great interest on account of the pending election of his successor. Col. L. H. Charbonnier had been appointed in the interim acting chancellor and filled the position with dignity and consummate tact under the most trying conditions. Declining to permit the use of his name for the permanent duties of the office, he maintained the standard of deportment and scholarship of the college with distinguished ability during the year of his incumbency.

Two elements appeared in the board—one demanding a young, progressive, active man, fully abreast with the times; the other more conservative, insisting on a minister of the gospel, a person of sobriety and positive religious convictions.

An adjourned meeting of the board was held in October, when happily both elements, at the first suggestion of his name centered upon a gentleman of great ability, progressive in thought, aggressive in character and immovable in the discharge of duty, the Rev. William E. Boggs, D. D., of Memphis, Tenn.

Dr. Boggs' election was unanimous and after due consideration, he accepted the call and entered upon the duties of the office in February, 1889.

In 1889, the board consisted of forty-one trustees and had become such an unwieldy body and the responsibility so divided that an act was passed by the Legislature reorganizing its membership. Governor James M.

Smith, during his term of office, had recommended that the board be reduced to nine, but his suggestion was not adopted.

The new law vacated all places on the board and provided for the appointment by the Governor of one trustee from each congressional district, two from the city of Athens and four from the State at large. The Governor, the chairman of the commission on the Technological School were ex officio members of the board, and subsequently, the chairmen of the commissions on the school for girls at Milledgeville and the college for colored youths at Savannah were added, running the number up to twenty. The terms of office were fixed at eight years and the appointments made so that four shall expire every two years.

The attendance upon the University of Georgia has never attained the mark its friends have set for it. It has seemed that there were very many boys in the State who were able and who ought to be desirous of attending college, and yet who did not.

In 1802, President Meigs reported the attendance of about forty students which he says "compares favorably with William and Mary, Cambridge and Yale, none of which have more than two hundred students, although those institutions are from 100 to 170 years old."

The average number of students under Dr. Waddell was sixty and his administration was considered especially successful, both in point of numbers and work.

Towards the close of Dr. Church's term of office, the roll of students a little exceeded one hundred. In one of his reports, the president estimated the total number of young Georgians attending this and other colleges at six hundred.

In 1871, there was reported an attendance for the year of 262. Owing to extraordinary circumstances, this was a larger number than usual, and it is fair to discount it to arrive at an average of say 210.

The average attendance at the University of Georgia since the war has been 197—all students of college grade. We hear much from time to time of how much it costs the State to educate a student at the University. Such a calculation is childish and absurd. What father would calculate how much in dollars and cents it costs to raise his child or estimate his value by the amount paid for his support. Georgia is the better for such an alumnus of her University as Bishop Pierce, even if it had cost one hundred thousand dollars to educate him.

In 1899 Chancellor Boggs resigned to re-enter the ministry. Under his administration the University made greater strides than in any previous decade of its history.

By the act of August 30, 1890, Congress appropriated annually to the State College $25,000, two thirds of which became available at Athens. The scope of the departments was enlarged, the chair of Ancient Languages was divided, so too that of Modern Languages, and the Faculty increased from twelve to twenty. The attendance grew from 214 to 302, all of college grade. The Normal School was established and the Rock College property was set apart for its use. A new farm was purchased for the department of Agriculture. The Legislature appropriated $29,000 to build Science Hall and equip a laboratory of Electrical Engineering. The University was on the up grade.

The election of Chancellor Walter B. Hill, in 1899, aroused an interest among the Alumni in the University which had never been shown before. Dr. Hill is the first Alumnus who has ever held the office of Chancellor. As a lawyer and a scholar he had a wide acquaintance throughout the State and his election was hailed with gratification by men of every shade of sect and politics. The wisdom of his selection has already been demonstrated. Denominational antagonism once so bitterly displayed has been allayed; the Alumni have rallied to his support; the Legislature has been generous in its appropriations. The new dormitory and the new dining hall for students will be completed by the close of the year. The Alumni fund has reached $50,000. The Centennial year just closed has recorded the high water mark of attendance with 328 students.

Thus the steady growth of the University is seen.

But the times demand yet larger things and her sons must see to it that the Alma Mater wants for nothing.

Qui non proficit, defecit.

THE C. P. WILLCOX PRIZES.

The C. P. Willcox Prizes in French and German, amounting to fifty dollars in gold each, were established by the sons of the late Professor Cyprian Porter Willcox in memory of their father.

ALUMNI,

WITH THE DEGREE OF BACHELOR OF ARTS.

Under the rule of the Trustees the degree of A. M. was conferred upon all graduates of the University of three years standing. This rule continued in force until 1871. All Alumni prior to 1868 excepting such as died within three years after graduation, were MASTERS OF ARTS.

The record of students who matriculated but who did not graduate prior to 1814 has been lost. So from 1851 to 1861. The list has been supplied from other sources as far as possible, but doubtless there are many omissions. Prior to 1840 the date indicates the year the student entered college; but after 1840 his name appears under the year in which he would have graduated.
